a1 pdf deleÂ .Cancer cells evolve and become more aggressive in response to a variety of challenges in the tumor environment. This may allow cancer cells to escape the control of apoptosis and immune surveillance, and invade and metastasize throughout the body. This selection process has been clearly defined in colorectal cancer, where it has been demonstrated that CACNA1A, a gene that affects calcium homeostasis, is recurrently mutated in tumors with poor clinical outcome. This grant will focus on the mechanism by which CACNA1A contributes to tumor evolution. PUBLIC HEALTH RELEVANCE: This proposal will understand the physiological function of CACNA1A, and the origin of mutations that lead to increased calcium influx in tumors. This project will elucidate the mechanism by which CACNA1A contributes to tumor evolution, which may lead to new therapeutic approaches for cancer patients. 2 0.4 0.45 Total
