RoadRush® 2.0 (PC, PS2, PSP).2-Deoxy-D-glucose as a pharmacological agent to estimate the number of functional insulin receptors in peripheral tissues. It has been suggested that the binding of 2-deoxy-D-glucose (2-DG) to glucose transport and phosphorylating systems in adipocytes and hepatocytes is the only indicator of the presence of functional insulin receptors in these tissues. Because 2-DG competitively inhibits D-glucose transport, binding of 2-DG to insulin receptors should show a greater inhibitory effect than the D-glucose transport system. In order to test the validity of this hypothesis, we have investigated the effect of 2-DG on the ability of insulin to modulate the cAMP accumulation in isolated rat adipocytes. The ability of insulin to stimulate cAMP accumulation was completely inhibited by 2-DG in a dose-dependent manner with a 50% inhibitory dose of 8.2 mmol/l. A lower dose of 2-DG (1.6 mmol/l) did not block the stimulatory action of insulin on cAMP synthesis. In combination with insulin, 2-DG (50 mmol/l) inhibited further the cAMP accumulation induced by physiological insulin concentrations. These data indicate that 2-DG behaves as an excellent blocker
