And what about many-to-many mapping, how to show corresponding buttons and hide the previous buttons? A: The ones on many to many relationships are made by retrieving the id of the other object. You can thus add a method that is called when the button is called. In the method, you can retrieve the other objects id and then either update an element in your table or you can retrieve the elements based on the id. This can for example be done with a JSP, which is then called when you click a button. The ones on one to many relationships are made with a boolean variable. If the variable is true, the button is enabled, otherwise it is not. Thus, you can't check the mapping from the controller because there is no true/false in Spring MVC. What we know at the moment is that the phenomenon has been detected at less than a metre's depth below the continental seabed. It's extremely rare, and the researchers don't know whether there's a connection to the nearby 2011 Tohoku-oki earthquake. Whether this is the result of a deep crustal quakes or an extension of the nearby fault might be hard to say. But as one expert put it, "This is a profound event, which is consistent with geological evidence of past plate movements in the area, and appears to be a new type of seismic event." In other words, rather than being something that's just a bit weird, this is definitely something important. to cause airborne invaders to change their behavior and thereby find it harder to infect. Parasites and phytopathogens may be depleted by a raindrop traversing through vegetation before reaching its target. Predators may be destroyed through an interaction between their
