Check this out! A "Bullet" type game with movement and display kind of like Fluffy Gore. So this game is very addictive as well as easy to play. As you know, in Fluffy Gore you have to move the little ball across the screen and try to trap and hold the ball until it reaches the hole. This game is generally played on a standard record player. If you have a turntable or a cassette player, you can use them to play this game. Anyway, for a faster game, I have set up a special board on my computer. My new game has an objective of "collect 300 million" (3,000,000,000). I will be very happy if you can beat my record of "27,127,523" (2,715,832,242). If you play like a true challenger, you have a chance to beat my score! The rules of playing the game are very simple. The objective is to move a ball into the hole. Your goal is to collect 300 million balls before the time limit is up. The balls may be any color. Use your mouse to control the movement of the balls. When the ball passes over a bump, it will bounce back up. When the ball gets close to the hole, the line will vibrate. If the ball drops, it will bounce back up. You can set up a time limit of 20 seconds. You can set a time limit of 60 seconds for a "Time Trial" game. There are four kinds of "Bumpers" (curved lines that help you trap the balls). There are four kinds of "Kick Out Holes" (straight lines that help you trap the balls). There are four kinds of "Drop Targets" (small brown balls that you can move to stop the balls from bouncing back up). You may use different kind of balls. A variety of color balls can be used. Different sizes of the balls will have different bounciness. Balls that bounce back up are called "pops" or "nibbles". You can move the ball into the target to trap it (a mark is shown). You can move the ball into the line (a mark is shown). You can release the ball from inside the blue box (a mark is shown). You may move the ball into the "kickout hole" by moving the mouse cursor over the hole and Extracellular matrix as a diagnostic tool in pancreatic cancer. In the early diagnosis of pancreatic carcinoma it is hoped that serum determinations of tumour markers, such as CA19-9, will be useful. But these tests may be indicative of metastatic disease as well as primary neoplasia of the pancreas and may be associated with diagnostic problems and inaccurate marker values. The advantage of using the extracellular matrix proteins as biomarkers to identify pancreatic neoplasia was studied. Serum levels of antigens detected by immunoblotting with monoclonal antibodies were analysed in a series of patients with known pancreatic neoplasia and other benign conditions of the pancreas. A number of proteins increased in the serum of patients with pancreatic carcinoma and those with chronic pancreatitis. The results showed that the levels of many of the extracellular matrix proteins are increased in patients with cancer of the pancreas.
