Community Highlights App & Games Reviews How can you make a game where the player will be driving this car in this environment? Will we ever see a game where you can actually experience a broadening of scenery in a first person game? Maybe they have but I haven't noticed it yet. Why not, let's hope this is the first installment of such a platform. As an aside, This game is as close to sim racing as iRacing will get. Personally I prefer it this way but that's just me. iRacing is, without doubt, one of the world's most exciting driving games. From your very first lap, and all the way to your very last, you will be concentrating solely on the road in front of you and the track history, as well as the race stats in real time. Attention to detail is important in iRacing, and as such, a number of the cars and tracks carry an incredible real world (or some of the most realistic) heritage and styling. Using a state of the art, in-game physics engine and world-class racing teams, the developers have ensured that iRacing lives up to its name, delivering a full-on experience that is completely action packed. The very best part of iRacing is that the game has been designed to cope with whatever you want to do. From using a fingertip to play the game, to using a racing wheel to play, or the most traditional of driving with a wheel. There is no genre of race car fan that is not represented, either by a factory team, a privateer, or one of many touring series. Whether you want to concentrate on strategy, social aspects, or just enjoying the drive, the iRacing world delivers a multi-faceted experience. Features: Unlocked car stats: all available race cars have their stats unlocked. Fully interactive Track Dressing: iRacing makes it simple to alter, re-skin, or re-build the track. Over 250 track cities worldwide: Check out a list of the cities that are fully mapped for iRacing. Power Boost: This is a real-time boost, which you can use on the race track. Car & Track Class Tuning: Fine tune each part of your car, with AI controls so you can learn how to race. Race Car Class Selection: iRacing features many racing categories: Touring Car, Endurance, GT, GT3, GT4, and GTLM. Race Grouping & Championships: Create a group of your own club. Multi-Player: iRacing offers multiplayer racing on all licensed cars and tracks. Single Race: Or race the single-player career mode. Pedals: Race your first race on a simple configuration. Licensing: iRacing is a Play Anywhere game; purchase the game and you can download the content to your PC, or use the iRacing Mobile App to play. ----- Vehicles d41b202975

Field of the Invention This invention generally relates to the field of overheat protection in microprocessors and more particularly to an apparatus and method for detecting and/or removing excess heating from a power pin within a microprocessor chip. 2. Description of the Related Art The majority of microprocessors used in computer systems, such as IA-32, have several power pins on them, of which some power pins carry only 1.0 volt or less of voltage. The power pins are important in that they carry very high currents (milliamp and microamp) and are typically rated for 10 watts or more. However, a power pin is a significant source of thermal energy. If a power pin heats up, the chip temperature will increase, and eventually the microprocessor will fail. Excess heat in a power pin can also degrade solder joints which connect the pin to the package. If the current carrying capacity of the joint is exceeded, the solder will be degraded, causing a microprocessor to be inoperable. Often, the excess heat in a power pin is a significant cause of device failure. One example of such excess heat is that caused by a solid state switching power supply. Solid state switching power supplies are not a good candidate for use with microprocessors because the instant heat dissipation of solid state power supplies is many times greater than that of linear power supplies. This heat is typically conducted through the copper metal leads in the leads of the package to the power pin. The excess heat in the power pin is particularly severe with today's high performance microprocessors. In a microprocessor, the clock speeds are continually increasing to meet the demands for ever more complex applications. The faster a device operates, the more heat is generated, and the increased heat causes the power pin to produce more heat. To solve this problem, large thermal energy dissipation structures have been placed next to the power pins to prevent the pin from overheating. These large energy dissipation structures have been traditionally implemented as package This package provides the full set of iRacing Race day data. Simulator Controlled Data is uploaded to your iRacing account in the form of auto-generated race packets, with example iRacing data included. You can then open and analyze the data in DataDash, or simply load them into your iRacing sim to analyse. QR Code & Full Disclaimer DataDash.com offers the fastest way to download and analyze data from you or your favorite race event. Included with the download is a QR Code that you can scan with your smartphone and view a comparison of your vehicle's race position to everyone else's. That way you don't have to sit through hours of boring waiting or find a race that has been archived elsewhere. Full Disclaimer DataDash.com does not provide any support or analysis of the data, nor are we involved in the iRacing racing community. However, we receive positive feedback daily that shows our data is useful and accurate for both the iRacing.com community as well as pro racers and new iRacing sim racers. We do ship the data throughout the year, however you still need to download and run the data through your iRacing simulator, rather than running it on a public network. The information on this page may not be up to date.
