is executed in python? I am creating a game that is using a bunch of TextBoxes for input. I am having trouble with when the user wants to be able to create several test games at a time (I have 1 window and 1 textbox), and when the user creates another game in the same window. I have this line in my show_game() function: Control.get(TextBox[0]).config(display="None") which hides the textbox and I have this line in my input() function: Control.get(TextBox[0]).delete(0,END) which removes the text. But the window is still there. I have tried to use global variables, but even after deleting the text, the window still is there and is not hidden. I even tried using global variables to hide the textbox. How can I hide the window?

A: I've tried to use global variables, but even after deleting the text, the window still is there and is not hidden.
When you remove the text, you are deleting the text from the tkinter object given by Control.get(...), and so you are removing the data you were displaying. This is because tkinter objects are "reference counted". The configuration and delete methods modify an object's reference count. They don't actually remove the object from your program's memory space. They just update the reference count. If the reference count drops to 0, then Tcl/Tk deletes the object from the memory space, if not, it simply removes the reference. You need to do this: ... Control.delete(TextBox[0]) Control.config(display="None") ...
