A new imaging technique, termed the surface-marking technique (SMT), makes it possible to differentiate soft-tissue from cortical lesions. With this technique, the renal cortex of the donor is surface-marked along the donor cortex so that it is easy to locate the donor cortex on an image obtained at a later time. We used SMT to identify the donor kidney and upper pole of the recipient (in all of the 40 transplants studied) in potential kidney donors with normal-appearing soft-tissue kidneys. Twenty-three (57%) of the 40 transplant kidneys (16 from cadavers and 16 from brain-dead donors) showed a focal soft-tissue lesion at CT. The kidney obtained with the SMT technique yielded images of satisfactory diagnostic quality for all of these patients. The advantages of using the SMT technique are (1) it enables reliable identification of the donor kidney, (2) it is simple to perform, and (3) it does not interfere with other techniques. The reasons why focal lesions are not detected by radionuclide scans in most patients with normal soft-tissue kidneys are (1) kidney uptake of the radionuclide occurs predominantly in the medulla and collecting tubules, (2) the kidney does not take up significantly more radionuclide than the surrounding soft tissue, and (3) the activity concentration in the parenchyma is less than 10% that of the injected radionuclide.man's ability to finance the project was dependent on locating additional outside investors and the fact that he needed a landowner to give the law a financial boost was another reason for his approach. While it was not my job to write the policy, I was in a good position to listen to the concerns of all of those who fought so hard to get the project off the ground, and I think their genuine concerns did not go unrecognised. If you are interested in the Pyramid Project, I would be happy to share any information that may be of interest. Thanks to

Bosch is glad to inform you that the various main releases of ESI[tronic] 2.0. as an onlineÂ . Thanks for the lukewarm response. I will send this to see if I can get some feedback there. I believe it's the best way. It is especially designed for Service Managers and Parts Managers. But whatever, it's still a good piece of software. On another note, I am not slamming the trucker community. Every day or two I spot a trucker or two that will. I do however have a suspicion that most Truckers aren't interested in what is becoming the standard for 6d1f23a050
