Substrate effect of the PheB-catalyzed beta-hydroxylation of free-standing polyphenyleneoxide nanotubes. We have investigated the role of the PheB catalytic system in the synthesis of beta-hydroxy-phenylacetic acid (HPAA) from phenylacetic acid (PAA) on highly crystalline poly(phenyleneoxide) (PPO) nanotubes. The polymers were grown via the chemical ring-opening polymerization of PPO using lithium salts. The products were analyzed by liquid chromatography and the critical micelle concentration (CMC) of the C16-C24 salts was determined by conductivity measurements. The CMC value of the PPO monomer and oligomer was found to be quite low ( $10^{-2}$  M) and increased to approximately  $5 \times 10^{-3}$  M when the monomer was polymerized on the nanotube. This threshold was shown to be required to drive the polymerization process, where the conversion of the PAA molecule into HPAA was significantly enhanced. HPAA was subsequently found to enhance the stabilization of the tube in basic aqueous solution, mainly as a result of the increased PPO degrees of freedom.
