You have to give each layer its own individual brush. It's a little weird not having the brushes on its own layer. When you open a new file, it stores a collection of your saving information. In the path bar, you will see that this file opens in the area where you would like the image open. Collecting many of those images can be fun. You'll be able to build an image over a four-hour holiday as well.

With this newest version of the application, users who work in the browser can have the same breadth of tools in the desktop version. They also embrace some of the latest ideas in the browser, including real-time embedded help, and better autocomplete features for native tasks such as text and styles.
