I have a list of fields in a database and I want to be able to search them. I am using regex to do this. It is working quite well - it looks for all the fields, and also the length of the words in each field. My problem is that there are a couple of fields I don't want to include in my search - they are marked with a '*' in my database. Is there a way for me to exclude these fields when I run my search - or is there another solution I can use? This is the regex I'm using: ^[a-z]{1,}\.$ A: The way you're doing this is by opening your regular expression as a String, and then using the.indexOf() method to look for the *. This isn't a good approach; you're using a string, rather than a regular expression, to perform pattern matching, and you're then checking the string contents to see if it contains any values you want to exclude.
