In the current version of Photoshop, you get (or save incentive to upgrade to a paid version in the future and get Photoshop's proprietary features. The enhanced editing capabilities let you crop and really fine-tune your work. The program's full-featured 4K UHD (ultra-high-definition) video editing capabilities are used to create seamless panoramas and interactive 3D models. It can even import Flickr images (ala Instagram). Adobe Photoshop CS6 is arguably the greatest in the history of the industry – it's simply what makes Adobe unique. I'm a photo user, and I've been using Electronic Image's Photoshop 4 – 5 (those were magic years for photo editing!). I did use Photoshop 1 and Photoshop 3, but I wasn't a fan. Getting the 2D/3D capabilities of lightroom — without the hassle — was what appealed to me most. It's only when I discovered "magicmuffins" that I turned to "pro" Photoshop. I've been using Photoshop for so long and already paid for the upgrades, why NOT upgrade to 6? While I'm a part of photography communities on social-networking, I no longer contribute to discussions that it makes me feel inferior to. I'm an artist who happens to know how to use a camera. I'm a member of a professional creative community, and in doing this review, I intend to draw awareness to a community I started in 2010, where I haven't been for 2 years, due to personal and professional commitments. Some will argue that the greatest tool of all time is an award to be won by the people who score the most wins against Microsoft. They're right, of course. As an independent I'd like to live in a world where Adobe wins. I'm jazzed about the new features, I'm relieved that some of the annoying bits of earlier versions are gone, and I'm hopeful to see more of a 3D editing environment soon. It's also made me wonder if creativebies will ever exist, let alone social-networking communities that are all about creativity.
